1. THE DEFINITION OF PROFESSIONAL AND WORK ETHICS

This code of conduct defines the need of National Ambulance employees to perform their duties faithfully, objectively with integrity, and to ensure work constantly to achieve the objectives of National Ambulance. It also means that National Ambulance employees should do their work within the limit of the given authorities, and to do it in good faith without any bad intent, negligence, violation of laws or harming the public interest to achieve any personal interest for them or others.

2. THE SCOPE

This code of conduct applies to all National Ambulance employees.

3. PRINCIPLES

The code of conduct principles are identified to enhance National Ambulance employees' performance and gain the respect of the internal stakeholders, management, colleagues and the external stakeholders, or any member of the community.

These principles are applicable to all National Ambulance employees.

To achieve the above principles all employees should always comply with the following general obligations.

4. GENERAL OBLIGATIONS

- The employees should comply with United Arab Emirates laws and regulations.
- The employees should behave in a manner that promotes and preserves the country's core values, integrity, and good reputation.
- The employees should be aware that all individuals are equal, and the law does not discriminate regardless of gender or nationality.
- The employees should be aware that serving the country and the community is an honour and privilege cherished with a sense of pride.
- The employees should have respect for rights, freedom and openness to others.

- The employees should comply with the values and principles of tolerance, compassion, and cooperation with all.
- The employees should commit to the optimal use of social networking sites in a manner that does not affect their reputation or the reputation of National Ambulance or the country in general.
- The employees must be committed by all the laws issued in the country that regulate the use of social media.
- The employees must use social media platforms wisely.
- The employees should exercise the highest ethical standards and adhere to the code of conduct at work and out of work.
- The employees should uphold the highest principles of professionalism and ethics while dealing with any third parties.
- The employees should commit to the principles contained in the United Arab Emirates National Program for Tolerance, including respect and moderation, and a commitment to non-discrimination based on origin, religion, or race.

5. EMPLOYEES' OBLIGATIONS

➤ SERVICES COMMITMENTS:

- The employees are not permitted to delegate their duties to others unless explicitly authorized by law, the express written authorization of their direct superior, or result from force majeure.
- The employees are committed and obligated to carry out their duties by individual responsibility and competency principles.
- In carrying out their duties and obligations, the employee should consider public interest only. They must apply any laws, rules, and regulations in force related to the nature of their jobs, without exception.
- The employees should carry out their duties with speed, precision, objectivity, and good faith.
- The employees must arrive at work at the start of the official working hours by applicable regulations. They are also required to be present at their workstations during official working hours to carry out the obligations related to their duties and positions.
- The employees are required to execute their duties diligently during working hours.
- The employees should not hesitate to work outside official working hours if necessary for the public interest if they were instructed to do so by their direct line manager to ensure business continuity.
- The employees are required to execute their duties within a defined timeframe. If such a timeframe was not defined, then their tasks must be executed within a reasonable time.
- It is employees' responsibility to execute any task assigned to them, even if it falls outside the scope of their usual duties and responsibilities. The employees cannot refuse such tasks so long as their direct line manager issued the instructions.
- It is employees' responsibility to execute their duties efficiently and by best practices or adopted standards.
- The employees are committed to achieving excellence in individual and team performance.
- The employees are required to improve their knowledge, skills, and competencies through ongoing learning and training.
- The employees must assist their colleagues in developing their knowledge, skills, and competencies and encourage them to share and transfer relevant knowledge.
- The employees must take care to preserve and protect personal information and maintain confidentiality.
- The employees must balance the scope of work and personal life.

➤ BUSINESS CONTINUITY COMMITMENTS:

- The employees are committed to the ongoing execution of their duties and responsibilities to ensure the continuity of the services.
- The employees must not neglect their duties or behave in a manner that may lead to delaying, paralyzing, or disrupting the service or that may affect their judgment or performance.
- The employees must fully and accurately inform their direct superiors of all issues and matters related to the nature of their work.
- The employees should always strive to create an innovative and effective environment to perform their tasks.
- The employees should respect the clients' and the public's time, prioritize it, and not waste time on personal matters, and give the impression that serving them is our top priority.
- The employees should commit to the culture and mentality of facilitation, simplification, problem solving, willingness to work, and the initiative to give solutions.

➤ COMMITMENT TO RESPECT SUPERIORS, COLLEAGUES, AND THE PUBLIC:

- According to social customs and professional standards, the employees should respect their superiors and colleagues and act with discretion, wisdom, objectivity, neutrality, and impartiality in all verbal communications.
- The employees should be polite with the public with whom they come into contact by the nature of their duties and the same execution.
- The employees should refrain from discrediting their superiors or colleagues personally or professionally, verbally or in writing, without providing relevant proof, or behave in a way that casts doubt of their superiors or colleagues' experience or skills.
- The employees should not burden the public or their colleagues with tasks that are not considered essential.
- The employees should not be excessive in using the authorities assigned to them by law, rules, and regulations.
- The employees are required to respect the rights of their superiors and colleagues at all times within an environment free from discrimination, harassment, violence, and obscene or indecent words.
- The employees are required to participate diligently, impartially, with integrity, and in good faith in any formal investigation concerning their performance and to testify in any lawsuit, if so required.
- The employees are required to perform their duties to ensure the workplace health and safety and the safety of superiors, colleagues, and the public.
- The employees should not attempt to gain preferential treatment through flattery, deception, favoritism, or nepotism.
- The employees are required to deal with colleagues and share opinions in a highly professional and objective manner, and they are also required to offer assistance wherever possible to solve any problems they face in the workplace.
- The employees must spread a cheerful ambiance among their colleagues to enhance performance, improve the work environment, and consolidate the right institutional culture in the workplace.
- The employees must show moderation and respect for others in their actions and dealings with everyone.
- The employees must take a positive attitude that recognizes the right of others to enjoy fundamental human rights and freedoms.
- The employees must respect others, their privacy, and their intellectual property and not bully them or cause harm to their work or digital identity.
